*Representative Work from Missouri, Kansas

February 1 - March 1

*The Kansas City Art Institute

FOREWORD

SPECIAL exhibitions have two purposes—The First—To afford the artist the opportunity to display his work, and Second—To give the public the opportunity of seeing the art created.

It is impossible for an artist to reach any considerable number in any other way than through the special exhibition, and it is equally impossible for the public to see the work of a great number of artists except in the special exhibition.

There has been much discussion of late concerning the relation of the Art Museum or Gallery to the artist. Some artists seem to feel that the exhibitions are conducted solely for the benefit of the gallery, that the artists are providing interesting entertainment for the public, without compensation and at some expense. This is in some measure true, but it is also true that the artist has no other means by which he may put his work before the public, and a discriminating public, except through the exhibition. Most private galleries and dealers charge a rental fee for space, and also demand that the artists bear all the expense of the exhibition, such as transportation, catalogs and publicity. The Museum meets the artist more than half way in these matters. The space is given free, one-half or all transportation costs, and catalogs and publicity is borne by the Museum. In addition every effort is made to sell from the exhibition, and in the case of The Kansas City Art Institute no commissions are charged—The Museum goes farther. In most places prizes and medals are awarded. Among all producers the artist alone receives such generous treatment.

The Midwestern exhibition was established solely for the purpose of aiding those artists living in the territory surrounding Kansas City, who find it difficult and expensive to exhibit in the larger centers of the East. We hope to encourage our artists to remain in the West.

The Jury system of selection for such exhibitions has proven the most satisfactory, while there are many disappointments, yet success will crown the efforts of those who try. It takes time and continued effort to build up an appreciative buying public, and unless the artist is willing to bear his share of the burden, he can never hope to receive proper recognition.
